Commissioner

A century is a long time.

It is an especially long time for a farm to remain in one family's possession when you think about all the trials and hardships farmers have faced through the years including the Great Depression, droughts, floods and growing development pressure.

I am proud that many family farms in North Carolina can claim 100 years of continuous ownership. In fact, more than 1,600 farms are part of our department's Century Farm Family program, and we keep getting more applications for this program every month.

I was recently in Brunswick County to celebrate the addition of 32 new members to the Century Farm family fold. It was a great day and a great celebration of North Carolina's number one industry – agriculture.

I am inspired by the stories I hear from these families and the pride they take in their land and profession. As a farmer myself, I understand very well how difficult it is to keep the land in the family, to turn down offer after offer after offer for your land and to toil long hours and never know if Mother Nature will cooperate with you on your crops.

The Century Farm program is a way to honor and recognize the sacrifice and dedication of these families who value, appreciate and work every day to preserve a way of life that is anything but easy.

Agriculture has been the backbone of our state's economy since its founding. It is the reason we have first-

Water-wise gardening info and tools available

In the wake of one of the most severe droughts in recent history, nursery and landscaping businesses are taking extra steps to educate consumers about water-wise gardening techniques that can help maximize the benefits of rain to minimize long dry spells.

With water restrictions in place in many communities across the state, some consumers have simply opted not to purchase plants or use landscaping services. But homeowners and plant lovers do have options that allow them to enjoy their plants and gardening.

"Right now, everyone in the green industry is down on their knees praying it will rain," said Tina Mast of Raleigh's Homewood Nurseries. "We want people to know they can come out and replace the plants they lost during the summer and fall drought of 2007 and we'll help them figure out the best species and layout for their yards and gardens."

Homewood, which is on a private well water system, is helping its customers by giving away free milk jugs of water and stocking rain barrels to catch recyclable water. It has also developed educational brochures and Web site tips.

A new promotional campaign, Water-Wise Works! also seeks to educate the public on how they can successfully grow plants in the home landscape even during periods of drought and water restrictions. The Water-Wise Works! campaign partners the NCDA&CS with the N.C. Green Industry Council and N.C. State University's horticulture department. Water-Wise Works! emphasizes six important areas that will help homeowners maintain an attractive landscape with less water. A central component of the campaign is the Web site www.TarHeelGardening.com, developed by the N.C. Nursery and Landscape Association and NCDA&CS.

"I think there's a misconception that you can't buy plants and shrubbery during a time of drought," said Bill Glenn, an NCDA&CS marketing specialist. "But with the expertise of

Boll weevil assessment is $2.10 per acre for 2008

North Carolina's boll weevil assessment for 2008 has been set at $2.10 per acre, 40 cents less than last year's fee.

The fee supports the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' joint program with the Boll Weevil Eradication Foundation of North Carolina to monitor cotton acreage for boll weevil activity and to respond promptly with eradication treatments if necessary.

"Even though cotton acreage in the state was lower last year, cotton continues to be a significant crop for our farmers," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "We need to continue to protect our state's cotton from potential re-introductions of the boll weevil."

The boll weevil was eradicated in North Carolina in 1986.

The foundation, in cooperation with the NCDA&CS Plant Industry Division, implements the program. With foundation oversight, contractors install and monitor traps from late summer until after harvest and frost.

For the 2008 growing season, the foundation is implementing a new grid trapping system that will install one trap per 160 acres of cotton planted. It will employ the latest technology in digital map imaging, data recording and quality control using a high-tech barcode scanning system.

Because the focus of North Carolina's program has shifted from eradication to monitoring for re-infestation, the number of traps visible in the field will decrease. As such, each trap placed in the field will be critical and producers are encouraged to contact the foundation if traps are knocked down. In streamlining the program, grower costs will be minimized while still maintaining a high level of quality in trapping and monitoring, said Gene Cross, director of the NCDA&CS Plant Industry Division.

A total of 21,837 traps were placed and maintained on 18,316

the people in our green industry and a little extra effort, you can. The Web site TarHeelGardening.com offers a number of tips and techniques people can use in their gardens and yards.”

Water-Wise Works! practices promote an environment that encourages healthy plant growth and uses careful planning and research on the best species and layouts of plants, trees, flowers and turf grass that match the landscape site. These practices greatly reduce the need for irrigation.

“Good horticulture practices such as proper plant selection, site preparation and landscape maintenance practices are key,” said Barbara Fair, assistant professor of horticultural science and N.C. Cooperative Extension landscape specialist at NCSU. “We need to use all the tools available because none of these methods alone will work.”

It’s most important to choose tough plants that can withstand both extremes, Fair said. In choosing a landscape, don’t create a desert landscape in response to current dry conditions, because in the last four years there has also been very rainy weather, she said. As homeowners look to the future and normal rainfall returns, they may want to consider planting hedges of drought-tolerant evergreen plants such as holly, arborvitae, eastern red cedar and spruce.

“Homeowners may also want to consider using rain barrels or other water harvesting methods such as cisterns to make the best use of the rainfall we do get,” Mast said. “As our lakes begin to fill back in, water restrictions will be lowered, but it’s always good to have additional water on hand.”

Homeowners can also help their landscape plants survive by keeping them healthy. For example, use care with string trimmers or mowers around woody plants to avoid damaging them. Some thin-barked species will never recover from a bark injury.

Six Tips for Water-Wise Gardening

- 1. Prepare your site properly. Well-prepared soils enhance root growth and reduce establishment time for newly installed plants, decreasing the frequency of supplemental irrigation.
 - 2. Select the right plants. Proper plant selection will help ensure success in all conditions. Plant failure often occurs when a plant has been placed in a landscape area that is not conducive for its growth. Select species that will survive droughts as well as times with plenty of water.
 - 3. Manage turfgrass areas effectively. Well managed turf uses less water and still looks great. Proper turf management is crucial during periods of drought. Turf provides many environmental benefits, such as reducing pollutants, storm water runoff and soil erosion. Because grass is the top water user in any landscape, consider using it in smaller areas.
 - 4. Mulch, mulch, mulch. Proper use of mulch reduces water needs and is attractive too. Mulch conserves moisture by reducing evaporation. Mulch around woody plants should never be more than 3 inches deep, while mulch around herbaceous plants should never be more than 1 to 2 inches deep.
 - 5. Water plants efficiently. Use only as much water as needed for plant health. Use a rain gauge in your garden to keep track of how much water your garden receives naturally by rainfall. Group plants with similar water requirements together in the landscape. Apply water just before or just after dawn to minimize evaporation.
 - 6. Capture and recycle water. Catch water in rain barrels and cisterns for use in your landscape. Capture precipitation and excess irrigation water, maintaining the quality of water resources by minimizing water lost as runoff. Homeowners installing hard surfaces in their landscapes may want to consider pavers or other porous materials rather than concrete, as both allow penetration of rainfall into the ground.

Dairy Advantage program aims to stabilize N.C. dairy industry

A new strategic plan called Dairy Advantage has been established to help stabilize North Carolina’s deteriorating dairy industry, which has seen the number of farms drop by more than a third in just the last decade. The plan seeks to enhance the value of the dairy industry to the state’s economy, support dairy farm numbers and maintain farmland and open space. Dairy Advantage will assist farmers who wish to stay in dairy farming to expand in place or relocate within the state. The program also aims to recruit and provide assistance to dairy farmers wishing to come to North Carolina. “Our dairy farms are an important part of our economy and our agricultural heritage, and also play an important role in continuing a safe and wholesome food supply in our state,” said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. “We hope the Dairy Advantage program will help farmers operate more efficiently and effectively to help keep them in business.”

The N.C. dairy industry brings in more than $138 million a year in cash receipts for milk and milk products, and its total economic impact was estimated at $500 million in 2006. In addition, Dairy Advantage also seeks to reduce the current deficit in milk production and provide consumers with more local milk. Two pilot programs have been created as part of Dairy Advantage. The first program offers on-farm assessments to give farmers a critical look at a farm’s operations to help determine ways of saving money and increasing profits. The second pilot program will help dairy farmers create a “profit team,” similar to a board of directors, to help resolve any issues the farm faces. The profit team will act only as a team of advisers, not actually replace the decision-making responsibilities of the farmer. This program is modeled after a similar project in Pennsylvania that was responsible for increasing profits an average of $250 per cow in one year. Dairy Advantage is a joint effort between the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, N.C. State University Cooperative Extension, North Carolina Farm Bureau and the N.C. Dairy Producers Association. The plan was announced at an industry meeting in January, and the roster for the pilot program is full. However, the program will accept more farmers once it is fully operational.

NCDA&CS seeking federal approval for pharmaceutical disposal program

North Carolinians will have a new option for disposing of their unused pharmaceuticals if a program proposed by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services receives federal approval. Staff members with the department’s Pesticide Disposal Assistance Program have asked the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency to allow the program to collect unused prescription drugs and other medications alongside unwanted pesticides. The department submitted its application in October. DEA approval is necessary because the program might collect controlled substances. “Our department pioneered the safe collection and disposal of pesticides back in 1980,” said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. “By slightly modifying our program, we can also become a national model for helping citizens safely get rid of unused medications. At a time when concern about medications ending up in our nation’s waters is growing, this program could be a great benefit to our state.” Derrick Bell, manager of the Pesticide Disposal Assistance Program, said the department works with N.C. Cooperative Extension and household hazardous waste programs to hold pesticide collection events in every county in the state at least once every two years. “People drop off their unused pesticides, we collect them and a hazardous waste contractor incinerates them,” he said. Under the proposal, disposing of pharmaceuticals would work much the same way, Bell said. People would drop their medications into 55-gallon drums filled with a solvent that would render the drugs unusable. The hazardous waste company would take the materials to a licensed incinerator. If approved, this model also could be used by local household hazardous waste programs, he said. The department could include pharmaceuticals in the PDAP at little additional cost, Bell said. The PDAP has collected 2 million pounds of pesticides since it began in 1980. The department has been working with the N.C. Department of Environment and Natural Resources, other state agencies, the DEA, hazardous materials experts and the pharmaceutical industry since late 2006 to develop ways to promote responsible disposal of unused medications and similar products. Bell said pharmaceutical disposal initiatives aren’t widespread. Several states, including Maine, Washington and Wisconsin, are in various stages of setting up programs.

Gasoline and Oil Inspection Board adopts measure to encourage more ethanol blending in North Carolina

The N.C. Gasoline and Oil Inspection Board recently adopted a measure intended to stave off potential fuel shortages in North Carolina. The board initially approved a temporary rule changing certain specifications for fuel blends of up to 10 percent ethanol. The changes will make it easier for fuel distributors to blend ethanol with traditional fuel. They will not affect fuel quality. At a public hearing in Raleigh in March, the board voted to move forward on making the rule change permanent. State officials expect the rule to take effect following final approval by the state Rules Review Commission. The federal Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 requires fuel producers to use at least 36 billion gallons of biofuel by 2022. The mandate is expected to increase demand for ethanol from 5.4 billion gallons to 9 billion gallons this year. Existing state rules permit blending, but they do not provide for variances from certain specifications that may occur with ethanol blends. Because of this, many fuel suppliers are reluctant to permit distributors to use their products in blending. Without a change, fuel supplies across North Carolina could have been disrupted as national demand for biofuel increases. “Other states have already made changes in their fuel specification standards to facilitate ethanol blending,” said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. “Any delays in doing this in North Carolina could have disrupted fuel supplies, increased fuel costs for consumers and placed us at an economic disadvantage to other states.” The five-member Gasoline and Oil Inspection Board sets rules and standards pertaining to gasoline and oil products. The board is composed of the commissioner of agriculture, the director of the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services Standards Division and three members appointed by the governor.

Phase out for excise tax on piped natural gas began Oct. 1, 2007

■ Phase out applies to selected manufacturers and farmers

A new law that phases out the excise tax on piped natural gas for selected manufacturers and farmers went into effect Oct. 1, 2007, according to the N.C. Department of Revenue. The amount of the tax decreases each year until it is phased out completely in 2010. Certain manufacturers that operate manufacturing facilities and farmers who use the gas for any farming purpose other than preparing food, heating their homes and other household purposes are eligible for the reduced rate. Manufacturers are those businesses classified under industry sectors 31, 32 or 33 of the North American Industrial Classification System. Facilities in these sectors may be described as plants, factories, or mills; they use power-driven machines and materials-handling equipment. For a complete description of the sectors, including exceptions go to www.census.gov/naics/2007. To qualify for the reduced rate, a farmer or manufacturer must submit a completed copy of a Streamlined Sales and Use Tax Agreement Certificate of Exemption form to the provider of the natural gas. The provider will then pay the appropriate tax to the state. A copy of the form can be downloaded at www.dor.state.nc.us/downloads/fillin/E595E_webfill.pdf. Please note, a taxpayer only becomes eligible for the reduced rate of tax by meeting the eligibility guidelines and submitting the form. Gas providers may not recalculate the tax liability using the lower rate for the time before their client provided the form. A manufacturer purchasing piped natural gas for a qualifying purpose is required to enter its sales and use tax registration number on the exemption certificate. A farmer purchasing piped natural gas for a qualifying purpose is required to enter the appropriate exemption number as assigned by the Sales and Use Tax Division of the N.C. Department of Revenue. Meter number(s) should also be noted on the form. Meters for gas that is not used primarily in a manufacturing process should not be included. No prorating is allowed for mixed-use meters. If you have questions about eligibility, Form E-595E or any other aspect of this issue, please call the Taxpayer Assistance and Collections Center at 1-877-252-3052 or write to the Taxpayer Assistance Division, N.C. Department of Revenue, P.O. Box 25000, Raleigh, N.C. 27640-0001.
